MEAT SUBSTITUTES

In preparing this set of recipes, the object was to provide a means for supplying wholesome and substantial meals with a minimum of labor which would, at the same time, be appetizing and inexpensive.

Next to meat, the more substantial foods are: Fish, eggs, cheese, nuts, cereals, certain vegetables; such fruits as figs, dates, raisins; also milk and cream.

These recipes are not intended as a complete cook book. A few soups, beverages, cakes, puddings, etc., are given, the ingredients of which are hearty.

It is hoped that these recipes will contribute to the happiness and attractiveness of many homes by relieving the daily menu of monotony, and to some extent, reducing the expense of the table.

All measures are level. t—teaspoon; tb—tablespoon; c—cup; nuts—English walnuts sliced; season—salt and pepper to taste; yolks—beaten yolks of eggs.
